ADENDUM

Class of 1950

20th Reunion 1970

THE CLASS OF 1950
BOULDER HIGH SCHOOL

Spawned in the Great Depression, nurtured by the patriotic fervor of World War II, and matured during the early engagements of the Cold War, the Class of 1950 was marked as the Silent Generation as it quietly went about fulfilling its own ambitions and the expectations of its elders.

Those of the class, for the most part now, have arrived at their destinations in life and are quietly working there with security and a modicum of independence. But their long travail of transition from depression influenced by radio to affluence mirrored on television is disquieted by new norms and threatened by radical change and even revolutionary views.

But the Class of 1950 goes on to toil in its own way--neither saying much nor acting strongly. It has become the Silent Majority, watching in hostile silence while man both rends his environment and reaches for the stars.

A POEM FOR GRADUATION *

by Tom Putney

He seemed a heterogeneous being
As he stood back and said,
What?
Have I graduated?
I see the mountains singing in the distance
Singing sonorous songs about existence breath
Reality I feel in distances, remote and omnipotent
I say, now have I graduated?
Without a face or body he continued thus,
This day is one of going out
To worlds, infinitesimal in their strength and breadth
Never to be reached by gaze of man.
But gone am I and gone
I stretch through endless space--time windows unto them.
I'm graduated not past the work of knowledge
But quietly I now go forth by fond beginnings.
Thus now I see myself, a graduated being.

He stopped and quickly swallowed a glass of reality's water.

*A Poem for Graduation was written by Tom Putney in 1950 and appeared in the Owl on June 7, 1950.

Today's world isn't a whole lot different than it was in 1950, problems have only been enlarged, at least it seems so. A quick look at the final 1950 edition of the student newspaper, the Owl, which was published June 7 shows several interesting news items and feature articles that are not in the Odoroloc.

The headlines state that 160 seniors were to graduate. The main speaker was The Reverend Paul Roberts of St. John's Episcopal Cathedral in Denver. The ceremonies were presided over by the school principal, Owen L. Robinson. Victor J. Emmett, father of one of the graduating seniors and a school board member, presented the diplomas.

The paper also announced Class Day activities which included the class will, the class prophecy, and the class oration. The Owl carried the full texts of the will, prophecy, and oration.

Both the prophecy and the will are significant for their high-school approach to humor. In the will, for instance, Barbara Butler leaves "her ability to destroy one's appetite in the lunch room to Jean Smoot." And Bill Forrest and Dorothy Dalton "leave their physiques to Minnie and Jake." And Bob Huffman "leaves in a Huff."

The prophecy, too, is characterized by the flippancy and crudeness we all thought was so funny then. But some of the prophecies, by pure chance, have come true or nearly so.

For instance, it said Roger Perry is a "renowned screen producer and actor...." Roger is a television and screen actor. Darrell Branstetter, it said, "is a lion tamer." Though he is a sky diver and hunter today, Darrell really plans on being a lion tamer--he is entering politics in Virginia, where he now lives. Bob Fenner, the prophecy said, would be teaching abnormal psychology at BHS. In reality, Bob teaches psychology at the University of Washington.

Two prophecies are symbolic of the whole class. One, which is probably appropriate to the 1970 reunion of the Class of 1950 said Landis Parsons, "a famous geologist, found the skeleton of Boulder High School while digging in the streets of Boulder." Another prophesied today's mini-dresses and look-through blouses when it said Sarah Morris "is modeling new fashions called the 'Bare Look.'"

The Class Oration by Harry Waldrop was serious and well thought out, and parts of it are worth citing here.

Harry reminisced about the years in school and predicted how much fun it would be to look through the year-book ten years from then (he didn't say anything about 20 years later).

Then he made a point that might be well worth reflecting on today when he said:

"Looking back is fun, but there are other, more important things we should do today. It's important to find some sort of summation for our achievements. ..." He then spoke of the purposes of school and spoke of how well BHS was equipped to serve both knowledge and training and also "to help integrate the individual into society."

Harry said the fashion of telling graduation classes that the "world" was their oyster and to go out and get it" was old fashioned, and many things had happened to the world to change it.

In summation, he spoke words that have even heightened meaning today.

"This is a period of great technological advancement.... The way is long and hard for us if we would succeed. This is an age of specialization and usually the best trained man is the most successful. It's fine to have dreams and ideals, but remember that it is hard work that makes those dreams come true.

"This is a time of crisis; in spite of the great advancement we have made in the sciences, we still have a long way to go to catch up both morally and politically. The world is what we make it; let's try to be the generation that can say: 'We did it all ourselves, we've left a somewhat better and happier world for our children.'"

Was our generation listening while today's generation, somehow, was?

IN MEMORY

One classmate, Gail Teegarden, was killed in action during the Korean War.

Dick Grohne was killed in the crash of his Navy plane while flying off an aircraft carrier in the Mediterranean.

If there have been other deaths among members of the class, the committee is regretfully unaware of them.
